Dear Padre

What is a monsignor?

What is the difference between a monsignor and a pastor? And how is a cardinal different from a bishop?

Edward

Dear Edward,

A simple way to look at your first question is that monsignor is an honorary term, while pastor is an eminently practical one. Pastors are priests who have been assigned responsibility for a particular parish community. They receive a canonical appointment from their bishop and have distinct obligations and rights that come along with their role of service.

Monsignors are a different story. The word monsignor is a form of address rather than a position. It's used when referring to priests who have been given certain awards or offices by the pope. These honors are typically awarded at the request of local bishops, most often to long-serving pastors or priests who play key administrative roles in a diocese.

A bishop is the head of a local church-an archdiocese or diocese. He is ordained and appointed to carry on the ministry of the apostles by preaching the Gospel and overseeing the life of his particular diocese. Cardinals are men the pope-the bishop of Rome-has appointed to be his special advisors and to elect a new pope upon his death. Most cardinals are bishops of major or historically important dioceses, but popes can and do appoint nonbishops as cardinals after the nonbishops receive Episcopal consecration (Code of Canon Law, 351).

Matthew Allman, C.Ss.R.

IN OUR ARCHDIOCESE, NO MONSIGNORS HAVE BEEN NAMED FOR OVER THIRTY YEARS.
